Not illustrated. 1885 Excerpt: ...inscribed the lines: God and the doctor we alike adore Only when in danger--not before; The danger oer, both are alike requited, God is forgotten and the doctor slighted. This communication is not intended as an infringement upon Dr. Cecils Ups and Downs of Country Practice. Go on, Bro. C, we are all interested in you and the black bovine. My object in addressing the Brief at this time, is to notice Dr. K. Taylors communication in the January number of the Brief (page 36), where he makes mention of two obstetrical cases which recently came under his management, it being his desire, therein expressed, that his brother practitioners--readers of your valuable journal--shall criticise the modes and means of management and treatment adopted in each case. In case No. 1, after the delivery of the child and the supervention of severe hemorrhage, Dr. Taylor states that the question arose in his mind, whether to arrest the hemorrhage before or after the removal of the placenta, and, concerning this, he desires the opinion of the profession. There certainly should have been no question concerning the thing to be accomplished at this juncture. The presence of the placenta in the uterus at this time, undoubtedly furnished the cause of the hemorrhage, and until that should be expelled and firm contraction of the womb induced, there was no hope of controlling the hemorrhage. In attempting to deliver the placenta, the doctor says, he commenced using a little traction on the cord, when it parted, leaving the placenta in the uterus; and, upon making a digital examination, it was discovered that there was an hourglass contraction of the internal os uteri closing the mouth of the womb, which rendered it necessary for him to introduce his...
