

CI AND THE VE3S LS OF IVRATII DELINEATED. Rom. ix. 22, 23. The vejfels of wrath fitted to de Jtrudkn ;and the vejfcis of mercj. which He had afore prepared unto glory, THE true notion of the prefent world is, that it is a ftate of preparajtion for another; and, therefore, fuch as we habitually are here, fuch fliall we be for ever. Mankind are now forming, like day in the potters hands, fome for honour and fome for diilionour ;fome for wrath and fome for glory. And as the potter does not put his vellels to their refpedive ufes until they are finifhed and prepared for them, fo neither are men removed from the prefent ftate, and lixed in their refpedive refidences in the eternal Vworld, until they are prepared, iiniflied and completely fitted for them. The vcflels of mercy are prepared before-hand for that glory with which they ihali be filled. A nd, on the other hand, the vefiels of wrath are fitted to deftruclio Ujand fit for nothing elfe, before they are dafhed to pieces by the iron rod of divine jullice. It is a crtlcielm v. orthy to be m.entioned, even in this folemn place, where I never chufe to make a parade of ufelefs learning, that the apoftle ufes a different form of exprellion, when fpealdng of thcfe different forts of perfons. The preparation of the vc Hels of mercy for glory, he afcribes to God, as his work, llcnce he ufes an active verb, refen ing cxprcfly to God as the agent the i-epls of merev.
