Not illustrated. 1901 Excerpt: ...to recognize and resist the labor union idea wherever It crops up. Whether it be a barbers union, a mechanics union, or a medical trust, the principle is the same. It Infringes the individuals liberty, dictates his course, restrains his activity, humiliates and tyrannizes over him by arbitrary usurpation of power. If the time comes in this country when our manufacturers fear the wrath and violence of labor unions, submit to their dictation, sink the interests of their business (and consequently the nations com235 merce) sooner than fight for their rights in the cause of progress to the bitter end, then the Republic will go down, and ought to go down. Labor is honorable, and the laborer worthy of his hire. But labor, no more than responsibility, capital, competition, and other factors of our commercial life, is exempt from the changes and hardships which progress entails. Labor-saving devices, while they made temporary confusion and suffering in the ranks of labor, lifted it from the level of barbarous occupations, increased general comfort, spread a veneer of civilization over all. In a little time, higher vocation opened to those bereft of employment, and things adjusted themselves, as they always do. Tyranny, whether of the classes or masses, is bad. The irresponsible tyranny which inheres in governmental ownership and labor unions, destroys the spirit and subverts the institutions of a Republican form of government The Divinity in Man. We know that this earth of ours is held in its orb by the attraction of other spheres. But what has held man to his destiny through ages of suffering, striving, oppression, error? What has gradually transformed him from the savage and benighted condition of the brute to the being of refined sensibilities and gentle ins...
